

Sydney.Concepts.Westmead

Sydney.Concepts.Westmead is an ongoing series of conversations between researchers across the depth and breadth of the University of Sydney and colleagues from the Westmead precinct. These conversations will cover exciting discoveries and innovations and are aimed at initiating new collaborative opportunities between the university and the broader Westmead community. After the talks you are welcome to join the presenters for a chat.

Friday 20th July 2018 : 11.30—12md

Interaction Design: What is it and what can it do for health? .

What is design? And how is that different to interaction design? This presentation will provide an overview of human-centred approach to the design of interactive products and technologies in the context of healthcare, with examples from research and practice in and out of Westmead.

Speaker: Dr Naseem Ahmadpour is a lecturer in Interaction Design. In her research, she explores emerging technologies that can enhance motivation for self-regulating behaviours and emotions. Her research is aimed at inspiring new designs that help us better engage with activities that improve our health and wellbeing.
