

Health Services Plan to 2026: Growing Good Health in Western Sydney

Why do we need to change?

Western Sydney is the fastest growing region in the state. Our rapidly growing and ageing population, together with an increase in complex and chronic illnesses, means more demand for healthcare services.

The Western Sydney Local Health District Health Services Plan to 2026 ensures we can meet that demand now and in the future.

Our focus is to help people in Western Sydney live well, get well and stay well.

Priority Changes

- Work with service partners - integrated care
- Promote health and wellbeing
- More wholistic mental health care
- More care options in the home and community
- Strengthen connections between services
- Expand our hospitals
- Invest in areas which enable transformation such as technology, research & education
- More opportunities for healthcare staff

Priority People

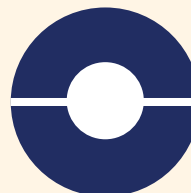

Western Sydney is a diverse community with a complex range of health needs, but we've prioritised some groups due to their significant health needs.

Your healthcare neighbourhood

The way healthcare is delivered has changed. The patient is at the centre of care and our focus is on health rather than hospitals.

Building a stronger healthcare neighbourhood will give more flexible options for receiving care.

Better integration with other healthcare providers and new technologies will make sure you receive the right care in the best place for you – at home, in your community or at hospital.
